Truly it cost to build this great nation. Perhaps none but the few remaining veterans knows how great the price paid to keep the grand old Stars and Stripes floating over our united people, who are hastening toward the time when there shall be no geographical boundaries, but when all shall join in one great shout,

"We joyfully and without any stint acknowledge at such a time the divine heritage of freedom and truth of which this banner of ours is so fitting a symbol. We gladly note that the gift is to the righteous, not to the anarchist, not to the criminal, not to the libertine, but to the God-fearing. How truly these words bring home to our minds the character of the men we have come to know as patriots. Almost to a man they are lovers of truth, respecters of the law, men of deep reverence for the institutions of religion, whose lives have been tempered and sweetened by acquaintance with the Nazarine.
